

Institute of Mathematics of the Polish Academy of Sciences

announces an open call for 3-7 years assistant/associate professor positions

The Institute offers assistant/associate professor positions starting during the academic year 2019/2020, for mathematicians having substantial research achievements commensurable with the position.

The successful candidates will be expected to conduct vigorous research in the field of mathematics or its applications and spend a period of at most 2-3 semesters (depending on the total length of employment) working at the University of Warsaw within the exchange programme between the two institutions.

The Institute expects that, especially the senior candidates, will either establish their own research teams, organize and run seminars, mentor the beginners (in particular PhD students), and actively participate in existing seminars, or very significantly contribute to the success of existing research groups.

The Institute will also expect participation in Polish and international research programs and grants, including applications for new ones.

Achievements of the researchers accepted within the framework of this competition will be evaluated periodically, especially when there is a case for promotion.

The application should contain a cover letter, research statement, a CV including list of publications, copies of most important recent papers and an agreement for processing personal data in the recruitment process.

Applications should be submitted by January 23, 2019, to the address
